1. The most significant (not more than three) experiences I had today were:

Dr. Crawford's little daughter made the noon meal food run and the Laundry run with me in the truck.

Why they were significant to me.

It seemed that she wanted to see the institution, via the back door, so to speak; as one of the help sees it.

She stayed close to me, so that not the slightest harm might befall her.

2. The thought suddenly occurred to me today that (a certain problem, a certain condition) might be partially solved by:

The thought occurred to me that the unpleasant sight and odor in Pellow, which both little Miss Crawford and I remarked to each other about, might be improved through better sanitation and ventilating practice.

3. Had I more time today I would have liked (to work on the following problem, to do this . . . because . . . ):

1. The most significant (not more than three) experiences I had today were:

My regular helper on the truck had the morning off, and his substitute refused to work. I had to load and unload the truck alone.

At Pellow Cottage, they had garbage on the cart which I had to take off, in order to pull the food cans in.

Why they were significant to me.

I think some substitute should always be available when the regular helper has time off.

Garbage shouldn't need to be handled by the food truck, or his helper.

2. The thought suddenly occurred to me today that (a certain problem, a certain condition) might be partially solved by:

Whoever is in charge of the dining room at Pellow should be alerted to more precautions in cleanliness. The place needs fumigation (or) and) airing to keep a more healthful atmosphere.

In short, "It stinks like all get out."
